

Nicola Barry

Ryanair boss is shot down at last

I BELIEVE it is called getting one's comeuppance. And it has come – not before time – to Ryanair boss Michael O'Leary, probably the most unpopular airline boss in existence.

The easyJet founder, Sir Stelios Haji-Ioannou, has accepted damages over Ryanair advertisements which accused him of lying. Hooray.

Ryanair has made the headlines a few times for upsetting passengers, charging people for wheelchairs at airports and the like. A few years ago, staff decided that a group of Scottish young carers wouldn't be able to fly south from Glasgow because they didn't have passports, only Young Citizen Cards – even though most other airlines accept these as proof of identity. Ryanair, ludicrously, claimed the cards breached its anti-terrorist rules.

Michael O'Leary is known for his lack of respect for others.

Now, at long last, the tables have turned.

PAY OUT: O'Leary

